growing PELLETS

Growing pellets have a high protein content, but has less calcium than regular layer feed. It supports the continuous growth of young chickens (between 6 & 20 weeks) by addressing their dietary requirements. One of the benefits of using pellets as feed, is that they hold their shape nicely, which means that there is less wastage if a feeder is knocked over by accident.

laying MASH

One of 21 premium products in our Drakensberg range

Once hens start laying eggs (around 20 weeks of age), they can be switched over to laying mash. The balance of protein, calcium and other vitamins and minerals will encourage top tier egg laying abilities in a flock of hens. Extra calcium added to the laying mash helps ensure that the eggshells are crisp, clean and crunchy.

laying PELLETS

Laying Pellets should only be fed to hens around 20 weeks of age or once they have started to lay eggs. The balance of protein, calcium and other vitamins and minerals will encourage their egg laying abilities, while extra calcium added to the laying pellets help ensure that the eggshells are crisp, clean and crunchy. Pellets hold their shape nicely, which means that there is less wastage if a feeder is knocked over by accident.

The logo for Drakensberg, featuring the word "DRAKENSBURG" in a white, serif, all-caps font. The text is set against a dark blue rectangular background. Below this rectangle is a horizontal band of a lighter blue color, which has a wavy, undulating shape at its bottom edge.

DRAKENSBURG

A large, stylized graphic element consisting of several overlapping, wavy bands. The bands are in various shades of gray and white. The central band is filled with a pattern of small, light gray dots. The overall shape is broad and tapers slightly towards the right side.
